

Dear Sir / Madam,

I listened to 'You and Yours' on the BBC today. A suggestion made by a couple of the contributors to the programme was for the salary of an MP to be increased by a large amount (up to £250000 pa ??) and to do away with all expense claims. If this were to happen then MP's pensions would need to be brought in-line with that of the general public. They should not continue to receive the golden-plated pensions they have awarded themselves over the years. In fact whatever happens on this issue, their pension arrangements are far too generous and ought to be reduced to match those of the wider population.

Regards,
